

No Visible Undergarments, Professional Appearance: Delta Airlines' Latest Policy

Description

Delta Airlines has recently issued a new set of guidelines for its flight attendants, causing a buzz worldwide. These rules, outlined in a two-page memo, focus on strict dress and grooming standards that every flight attendant—both current and prospective—must follow. The memo, which stresses professionalism and neatness, has drawn significant attention due to its emphasis on “invisible undergarments” and other specific appearance standards.

The Controversy

The new rules dictate that flight attendants must wear proper undergarments, but they must not be visible through uniforms. This specific guideline has sparked online debates about the appropriateness and enforceability of such policies. Social media has been flooded with comments, with some supporting the professional standards and others criticizing the micromanagement of personal choices.

Delta Airlines stands firm on the matter, stating that its flight attendants are the face of the airline and must embody its values. According to the memo:

“A Delta Flight Attendant represents the brand from the moment they put on their uniform. Our guidelines ensure that they provide a safe, welcoming, and elevated customer experience.”

Key Guidelines at a Glance:

- Undergarments: Must be worn but remain invisible.
- Hair: Must be natural in color, with no bold highlights or artificial shades.
- Jewelry: Only two earrings per ear (smaller than a dime), and a single nose piercing is allowed. No visible body piercings.
- Clothing: Dresses and skirts must fall at or below knee-length; no athletic shoes are permitted.
- Tattoos: Must be covered, and bandages cannot be used to do so.
